WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Freezing temperatures in the Valley this weekend with dry conditions. Mainly dry next week except for a chance of light showers during mid week. Mostly clear skies prevail across Northern California early this morning under dry northerly flow. We're seeing just enough of a northerly breeze to keep radiational cooling from its maximum potential. Even still, temperatures are running in the mid to upper 30s across the Valley as of this writing. Dry weather will continue the next few days as high pressure aloft builds over the eastern Pacific. A dry shortwave will pass through the northerly flow later today, enhancing the northerly surface pressure gradient. Locally breezy winds will be possible mainly along the western Sacramento Valley, and down favored Sierra canyons and slopes. Otherwise, we will likely be in for a couple of rather cold nights across interior Northern California. Coldest locations will likely be in wind-sheltered and outlying locations.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Scattered snow showers across the north slopes, near the I-5 corridor, will diminish this morning. Surface high pressure building into the Northern Rockies late this weekend will support a weak to moderate cool Santa Ana Wind Sunday into Monday. Gradual warming with fair skies is expected through the middle of next week. The only weather at the moment is confined to the north slopes of the mountains where strong north winds are pushing the moisture up creating clouds and scattered snow showers. These wintery conditions will last until late morning when the winds will drop off. There is a winter weather advisory in effect for the north slopes due to the combination of winds, snow, blowing snow and very low wind chills. Otherwise today will be sunny and cool as the low winter sun struggles to warm the cold air mass ushered in by yesterdays cold front.
